1

Register for the LSAT.

Go to www.lsac.org and select the test date that works for your schedule. Please be mindful of how law schools treat multiple attempts. You'll receive your score by email approximately three weeks after the test.

2

There are three types of questions:

- Logical Reasoning
 - Analytical Reasoning

- + an unscored writing sample.

Take the LSAT.

Visit www.lsac.org for test-day information (including required/banned materials).

4

Research law schools.

Go to <https://officialguide.lsac.org> to search the LSAC Official Guide to ABA-Approved law schools.

5

Pay for Credential Assembly Service (CAS).

CAS is required by all ABA-accredited law schools and compiles transcripts and letters of recommendations in your law school report.

6

Request transcripts.

Request transcripts from all post-secondary institutions attended and have them sent to LSAC. Allow at least two weeks for processing.

7

Review your Academic Summary Report.

View your report in your LSAC.org account.

8

Request letters of recommendation.

Download forms from your LSAC.org account to ensure timely processing of your letters.

9

Write/revise personal statement.

Use resources on campus to ensure your personal statement is the best it can be. Pay close attention to guidelines from each law school.

10

Create your resume and any other addenda or optional essays for your application.

Take your resume to the Stuckert Career Center for review. Consider whether you need to submit addenda to explain any weaknesses or character/fitness issues to the admissions committee.

11

Apply online to law school.

Apply to the law schools of your choice through your LSAC.org account. Make sure you proofread! Keep in mind that many schools use rolling admissions, so the earlier you apply, the better.
