Focus on your grades. Law schools consider your grade point average, so do as well as you can in every class. There is no required major for law school, so choose something that interests you and is academically rigorous.

Get involved. Join a club or organization that interests you or volunteer.

Prepare for LSAT. Consider taking a prep course, either online or in person, or working independently to study for the LSAT.

Research law schools. Make a list of schools in which you are interested in attending. Take note of the admissions criteria for each one.

Visit law schools. Take a tour and learn more about the law schools' requirements.

Complete your resume. Be sure to include any legal experience or activities that may be relevant to law school.

Write your personal statement. If you are applying to multiple schools, you will want to craft a different personal statement for each school.

Register for the LSAT. Registering early helps you secure your preferred date and testing location.

Request letters of recommendation. Ask professors who know you well and provide them with information about your academic abilities.

Submit your applications! June testing allows more time to prepare your application materials.
